

Are you passionate about social justice?

Do you want to learn about the gentrification happening in Chinatown?

Do you want to gain experience in conducting surveys and interviews?

Chinatown is one of the most rapidly gentrifying parts of Boston, where new luxury residential developments are driving up property values. Hundreds of families have been displaced and many more are at risk of being evicted. The Displacement Research & Action Network at MIT is partnering with a long established community based organization, Chinese Progressive Association (CPA) in the Chinatown neighborhood to measure the impacts of displacement on area residents using an innovative, internationally developed tool based on human rights standards and guidelines.

We are now looking for English-Cantonese bilingual speakers who could help us by surveying residents in Chinatown.
